At 39c—Dotted poplin and marquisette.
At 49c—Foulard, chiffon, satin, marquisette, messaline.

At 69c—Satin meteor, and pongee.
At 85c—A special yard wide black messaline and spot-proof foulard.

At 98c—Yard wide tub silk.
At $1—Striped and plain light and dark messaline. Changeable taffeta and charmeuse. Pongee, serge, foulard.

WHAT FASHION SAYS

The set-in sleeve must replace the kimono. Skirts remain narrow, short and scant. Tau takes precedence of other colors. Blue follows a close second. The one-sided effect in coats and dresses is a pronounced note. Corage bouquets of satin flowers, singly or in clusters, continue in great vogue. The Dutch neck and short sleeves prevail. Trimmed suits largely replace the severely tailored.

BURLEY MEN PLEASED

Success of Pool Puts New Blood Into Tobacco Industry

Lexington Herald.

The success of the ten-year pool brought joy to the members of the Executive Committee of the Burley Society yesterday and they, who had worked so hard to give it the start it has gotten, were the center of congratulation in their respective counties. Members of the District Board were proud also of the success of the pool and went home from Lexington to spread the good news to those who had helped make it a "go" by joining in the movement.

The Burley Tobacco Society has announced that it will establish loose leaf markets in Flemingsburg, Brooksville, Carlisle and Nicholasville, in addition to those already in operation in nine other towns in Central Kentucky, and one may be located in Maysville, Augusta and Falmouth. Other central points will be looked after if deemed necessary.

Under the new Burley Society system of handling the tobacco will be handled at the least expense to the grower, the buyer and the ten year pooling organization.

Since the opening of a loose leaf warehouse in Maysville by members of the old pool the feeling toward continuance of the Burley Tobacco Society ten-year movement has been but lukewarm and while no outward opposition has been manifested a good many of the most influential growers have not seen fit to go into the new movement.

Owing to the success of the markets of the Society in Mt. Sterling, Frankfort and Cynthiana the loose leaf warehouses at these points may be considerably enlarged.

On this day a paper bearing date of July 1st, 1905, and purporting to be the last will and testament of David M. Conover, deceased, was produced in Court and ordered filed and probated.

MRS. WILLIAM HICKS

Declared of Unsound Mind—Will Be Placed in State Hospital

Ripley Bee.

Judge Pannell and Sheriff McBeth of Georgia were here Sunday, and with Doctors Tyler and Price, visited Mrs. William Hicks, whose mind has been unbalanced for some time. She was declared of unsound mind and will be taken to the State Hospital.

Mrs. Hicks was formerly Miss Lillie Dabner of this city. Her condition is said to have been caused by the sad death of her mother, which occurred in this city about a month ago.

Fritch brothers were at Cynthiana on business Monday.

Dr. Alexander Hunter of Washington is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Edna Hunt, at Maysville.

Misses Lillian Williamson and Lora Scholter and Mrs. Theo. Collins of Ripley were shopping at the city yesterday.

Messrs. John Elliott, James and Frank Collins of Dover, were on the Loose Leaf Market at Maysville Tuesday.

Mr. N. S. Calhoun and children of South Market street left yesterday for New York City, their fathers home.

Mr. Charles Owens is attending the bedside of his cousin, Mr. William McCreary, who is seriously ill in Cincinnati.

Miss Rosa Fritch and her sister, Josephine, have returned home, after a week's visit with their relatives and friends at Cynthiana.

Mr. W. D. Oldham, the founder and proprietor of the Art Store in this city for several years, was a welcome visitor in Maysville Tuesday for several hours.

Mrs. Walter Wias of Cincinnati, Miss Judith Miller of Newport, and Mrs. E. H. Staley of Vanceburg returned to their homes, after a few days of business at Maysville.

Mr. H. L. Walsh, Assistant Secretary of the Equitable Trust Company, is in Covington looking after some matters in bankruptcy, where he said company is Trustee. Attorneys A. D. Cole, F. P. O'Donnell and G. W. Adair will leave tomorrow morning to be present when the case will be heard before Hon. H. M. Durrett, Referee.

NOTES WITH "REGRET" TEDDY IS RUNNING

Wilson Would Rather See Him in Mad House Than White House

In a letter to a friend in Lexington, from General James H. Wilson of Wilmington, Del., who formerly commanded the United States Cavalry corps under General Sherman, in the capture of Atlanta, General Wilson said:

"I note with regret that you are thinking of Theodore Roosevelt for President of the United States. I say 'regret,' for he has not only had his two terms, and nobody should have more, but he is a very dangerous, emotional, vacillating and unsafe man, entirely unfitted for further responsibility as President of the United States. It is one of the anomalies and absurdities of American life that he who was not in the fight of San Juan Hill, should have received the principal reward of the Spanish War in his election to the Presidency.

"Since his repudiation of his solemn pledge of November 8th, 1904, that: 'Under no circumstances will I be a candidate for, or accept another nomination,' in view of his many and flagrant violations of sound statesmanship, and since his Columbus speech, I regard him as a far fitter candidate for a mad house than for the White House. I have always wanted to see Kentucky Republican, but I shall be perfectly content to see it go Democratic, if it stands for Roosevelt as the next candidate for the Republican party."

What Came Between Taft and Roosevelt

They Parted Affectionately on March 4th, 1909, and Have Met But Three Times Since, But Many Letters Have Been Exchanged---Irritation Dating From Pre-Inauguration Days Has Been Aggravated By Tale-Bearing Friends---Breach Was Widened at Last Two Meetings.

Washington Special to St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The newspapers of March 6th, 1909, recorded an impressive scene that had taken place in the Senate Chamber just after William H. Taft had been sworn in as President of the United States.

"Than the ex-President," says one account of the inauguration, "started to leave the chamber with Senator Knox as an escort. As he passed around the rostrum Mr. Taft was coming down. Mr. Roosevelt ran up the steps and grasped President Taft by the shoulder. The President grasped his predecessor in the same way. For a second they hugged each other and then shook hands vigorously."

This occurrence, testifying more dramatically than any other to the warm friendship that existed between William H. Taft and Theodore Roosevelt three brief years ago, was recalled by hundreds in Washington to night when it became known that Roosevelt had entered the race for the 1912 nomination, and the questions were asked: "What is the explanation? What has brought about the change in the relations between these two men?"

ROOSEVELT'S LOVE OF POWER.

Republicans who know both Roosevelt and Taft intimately will tell you now that they realized from the time Taft was elected that a break was bound to come between Taft and his predecessor. They credit Roosevelt with having been absolutely sincere in his early manifestations of regard and affection for Taft, but they declare they were certain in the end that Roosevelt's ambition, his love of power, his desire to dominate the Taft administration, his habit of magnifying innocent acts into intended slights and his disposition to listen to the tales of trouble makers would lead to an estrangement.

The irritation on the Colonel's part, so his friends say, began even before Mr. Taft had been installed at the White House. When Mr. Taft was making up his cabinet Roosevelt understood to have made only one request, and that was that William Loeb, Jr., who had served for years as Roosevelt's Secretary, should have a place in the Taft Cabinet. At that time the country was speculating on whether Roosevelt was to dominate the Taft administration. The assertion was being made that Roosevelt having dominated Taft and contributed largely to his election, would in considerable measure dictate the affairs of the administration. It was chiefly to put an end to these rumors and establish the Taft administration on its own basis that the President turned Loeb down as a cabinet possibility. He offered Mr. Roosevelt's Secretary instead any other executive office within his gift. The President eventually took only one man from the Roosevelt administration, George Von L. Meyer, now Secretary of the Navy.

MIFFED BEFORE INAUGURATION.

Another occurrence before Mr. Taft was installed in the White House irritated President Roosevelt. Mr. Roosevelt, it was said, resented the appearance of Mr. Taft in Washington in the closing days of his administration. Mr. Taft came to the National Capital five or six days before the date of the inauguration as a guest of W. J. Boardman. With the exception of the incoming President the important immediately shifted from the White House to the Boardman residence. A long string of prominent callers trooped to the Boardman home day after day, and newspapers reported fully the doings of the President elect. President Roosevelt is said to have commented disparagingly to members of Congress on the action of Mr. Taft in having come to Washington and undertaken conferences with statesmen before the Roosevelt administration had breathed its last.

But Mr. Roosevelt, after his departure from Washington in a blinding blizzard, gave evidence of what many Republicans regard as a sincere desire to let President Taft establish his administration free from the Roosevelt domination. These Republicans add, however, that Colonel Roosevelt, while maintaining an attitude of insolation, always hoped and expected to be consulted in regard to the policies that President Taft should inaugurate and carry out. It was in this manner that he expected to exercise his influence, but Mr. Taft, while endeavoring to adhere to so-called Roosevelt policies as he interpreted them, early gave evidence of an intention to think and act for himself.

LETTERS PASSED BETWEEN THEM.

In the few weeks following the inauguration, before Mr. Roosevelt sailed for Africa, frequent letters passed between the two men, and while the Colonel was on his big hunt Mr. Taft received several communications from him describing his experiences. From the first, however, there was an apparent restraint between the two in regard to the discussion of legislation and other affairs of the administration. Republicans in Washington have been inclined to the opinion that the President himself has rather resented the popular impression that Roosevelt nominated and elected him, and this feeling has undoubtedly operated as a bar to the continuance of close relations.

Roosevelt's friends themselves acknowledge, however, that one of the "offenses" which the Colonel harbors against Taft was the character of a letter which President Taft wrote to Colonel Roosevelt just before he sailed for Africa. The President sent Major Archibald W. Butt, his military aid, to New York to deliver this letter to the Colonel as he was embarking. In this letter President Taft wished the Colonel a pleasant journey and thanked him again for what he had done for him. The President's letter is said to have closed with the expression: "I owe more to Charles P. Taft and you than any other two men on earth," or substantially those words. Roosevelt's friends have made no secret of his anger over that letter. They say he banished it and cried:

"Good Lord! So he puts money above brains, does he?"

Whether this was a tactful letter for the President to write Roosevelt is a question for political philosophers to solve, but the President hastened his friends that he intended to pay Roosevelt the highest compliment at his command.

PINCHOT MADE MORE TROUBLE.

With the refusal of President Taft to allow Gifford Pinchot, Roosevelt's friend, to dominate the affairs of the Department of Agriculture, followed by his dismissal from office, the tale-bearers and the trouble makers began to get busy. Mr. Pinchot himself traveled to Italy to get Roosevelt's ear first and to poison his mind against Taft. Roosevelt returned to the country after his African hunting trip under the impression that Taft had been backsliding from the so-called Roosevelt policies, and the Colonel's friends declare that his conviction in this regard has steadily been growing and that is the real explanation of his present entrance into the race.

The Roosevelt supporters insist that it is a matter of principle with the Colonel, a desire to save his policies and to champion the people's rights.

Taft Republicans insist, on the other hand, that the charge of backsliding on the part of the President is absolutely groundless; that Mr. Taft has carried out the Roosevelt policies, notably the anti-Trust law campaign, with a firmer hand and more consistency than did Roosevelt himself. These Taft supporters add that all this talk about Roosevelt policies is merely a cloak to cover the Colonel's desire for power, which they intend, in the controlling motive in the announcement of his candidacy. President Taft's friends say that the President's confidence in Roosevelt, his efforts to put the most commendable interpretations on all of Roosevelt's acts, his disinclination to listen to the stories of tale-bearers, and his continued acknowledgment of his obligations to the ex-President have been little less than remarkable. He has been the last to admit that Roosevelt has trod upon him.

ONLY THREE MEETINGS SINCE 1909.

Since Roosevelt and Taft parted in the Senate chamber on March 4th, 1909, they have met just three times—once in New York at a public gathering, soon after the inauguration; once in New Haven in the fall of 1910; and again in Baltimore last spring.

The last two meetings tended to widen the breach between them. Roosevelt visited the President in New Haven when he, Roosevelt, was involved in his fight against the Old Guard in New York State. After that meeting it was said Roosevelt had sought the conference with Taft because he was in desperate straits in his New York State fight and needed the influence such a meeting would have upon federal office holders in New York State. Roosevelt denied this and showed keen resentment. After the Baltimore meeting last spring newspaper dispatches were sent out that Roosevelt had assured Taft he would support him for re-nomination and this was promptly denied by the Colonel.

Through all of the remarkable history of the relations of these two men in the last three years President Taft up until Sunday night had insisted, when talking with his friends, upon taking Roosevelt at his word that he would not again accept a nomination for the Presidency.
